A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Converse Friends and Family,

As I wrap up my first year at Converse, I have been reflecting on what you – our students, faculty, staff, alumnae and friends – have taught me about this great institution.

Converse provides a very focused and personal learning environment for students. The connections they make here are deep, powerful and enduring. Students tell me how much they love our faculty and staff, that they learn more here than ever before, and that they appreciate the faculty's efforts to make lessons engaging and experiences meaningful.

Alumnae tell me how they developed friendships that have lasted a lifetime, how the connections they made at Converse open doors for them, and that they meet Converse graduates wherever they go, including in foreign countries, and always with a warm welcome. They take pride in the fact that their Converse degree is a mark of distinction.

Faculty members love working closely with students – watching them learn, grow and find their voice. Our faculty members who have taught in both coeducational environments and at Converse remark on how Converse students speak up more in class, are more active on campus, and grow and evolve to become competent leaders as students and after graduation.

I am honored to be part of this community of scholars, where students and faculty pursue excellence and collaborate in research, community service, study abroad programs and creative endeavors. Each member of our community understands that Converse is a place of principles and values, and they take pride in striving to meet our founder's ideal: "to see clearly, decide wisely, and to act justly." Converse cultivates in students – and students foster in each other – academic excellence, personal honor, integrity, a duty to the betterment of community and humanity, and the understanding that they must go forth to influence others in a powerful and ethical manner. Our goal is to create continuously curious learners who lead through their passionate, principled, and responsible examples.

This magazine celebrates several of our College's successes. Among them is the powerful story of Ellen Bryant Voigt's career as a poet and how it was impacted by her Converse experience. I'm sure you will be roused by both Ellen's verse and her accomplishments. You will also see how alumni Julie Jones and Jed Dearybury are leveraging technology to innovate teaching methods in our undergraduate and graduate education programs. It is this kind of focus on excellence that resulted in two Converse alumnae, Erin Fox '14 and April Willard Purser '03, being selected as this year's South Carolina Teachers of the Year.

We hope you enjoy these stories and that you will seek opportunities to return to Converse or to create your own local Converse community.

Thank you for welcoming my family and me to Converse, and for teaching us why Converse is so very special and beloved.

KRISTA L. NEWKIRK
PRESIDENT, CONVERSE COLLEGE

Regalia & Regaling

THE INAUGURATION OF OUR 10TH PRESIDENT

It was Founder's Day – April 21, 2017 – and the morning was punctuated by pomp and circumstance: robes, tassels and hoods; orchestral music; a Grand Marshal; the procession of 54 delegates from regional colleges and universities; greetings from elected officials and distinguished guests; and the presentation of the Symbols of Office.

The inauguration of Krista L. Newkirk as tenth president was a celebration unlike any other in recent Converse history. The blending of old and new traditions reflected the joining of past and future, and as day turned into evening, Converse turned from regalia to regaling.

INAUGURATION CEREMONY

Marking the milestone with a new tradition, the academic procession was led by a Grand Marshal bearing the new Converse Mace. The mace represents shared governance between the faculty and president, and bears the name of each academic department along with the Founder's Ideal to "See clearly, decide wisely, and act justly." Designed and constructed by sculpture professor Greg Mueller, it is crafted of purple heart wood from Wilson Hall's original construction. Dr. Melissa Walker, George Dean Johnson, Jr. Professor of History, was nominated by her peers and selected by the president to serve as the College's first Grand Marshal.

As all four living past presidents of Converse processed into Twichell Auditorium, they were welcomed with rousing applause. It was a seminal moment for the College and for Presidents Betsy Fleming, Nancy Oliver Gray, Sandra Thomas and Ellen Wood Hall as they participated in their first Converse inauguration other than their own.

Greetings and well-wishes were presented by Dr. Philip L. Dubois, Chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte; Trey Gowdy, United States Representative for South Carolina's Fourth Congressional District; Laura Stille, Mayor Pro Tem of the City of Spartanburg; Jean Toal, Chief Justice (ret.) of the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina; and representatives from Converse faculty, staff, students and alumnae.

Kimberly Varnadoe Kent '97, Chair of the Board of Trustees, conducted the investiture of Newkirk as tenth president, which was followed by the presentation of the Symbols of Office. Kent presented the Converse Medallion, which bears the names of all Converse presidents and was designed by Mary Helen Garrison Dalton '46, and Dr. Jeff Barker, Provost, presented the Converse Mace.

"Today is about Converse College, the long and important journey in the lives of young women, and our future in continuing to serve as an educational experience that transforms young people and serves to better our community," President Newkirk said during her inaugural address. "It is with humility, joy and hope that I accept the leadership of this great college. I appreciate the trust of the Board of Trustees, the faculty and staff, the alumnae and students, and the community."

Newkirk also spoke to the College's duty to the community beyond its gates, asserting, "Converse was founded by, and has been sustained by, community support over many years, and we will meet our obligation to this region by broadening our connections with local businesses and industry to develop the workforce they need, and by helping them retain talent in the Upstate to contribute to the region's economic development."

She offered heartfelt thanks to those who contributed to her personal and professional journeys. Among them, her husband, Lew Glenn, who "started as a good friend and confidante and grew to be the love of my life;" her sons, Conrad and Holden: "The greatest honor of my life is to be your mother and my greatest hope is that I can instill in you a deep sense of being loved, worthy, and capable;" and her high school music teacher, Starla Taylor, who "like all truly great teachers, inspired, encouraged and challenged me, while helping me to put my teenage troubles into perspective."

Following the ceremony, guests enjoyed lunch on the front lawn with the traditional displays of Dexter Edgar Converse's favorite dessert, strawberries and cream.

INAUGURAL BALL DINNER & THE DEXTER EDGAR CONVERSE AWARD

Converse hosted our most generous supporters, community leaders, and friends and family of President Newkirk for a dinner on the evening of the inauguration. The event included presentation of the Dexter Edgar Converse Award, the College's highest honor, recognizing those who have given extraordinarily of their time, energy and treasure. Past honorees present were Don Bain, Bill Barnet, Mary Rainey Belser '69, George and Susan Phifer "Susu" '65 Johnson, Mary Lib Spillers Hamilton '57, and Walter and Betty James '72 Montgomery.

This year's award was presented to Tom Hannah, a steadfast champion for Converse whose vision and leadership helped transform the College over the last two decades. Hannah served on the Board of Trustees for 16 years, including one term as chairman. His leadership is marked by his demand for excellence and his unwavering commitment to strengthening the College's foundation. In presenting the award, President Newkirk expressed, "Tom, we are thankful that you have dedicated so much of your life in support of Converse College. You are a role model for all who admire and benefit from your love of this institution!"

DANCING ON THE BACK LAWN

Following dinner, the Converse community joined together with dinner guests for an evening of dancing on the back lawn. Held under a sparkling tent streaming with colorful light, it was the ultimate party for all ages thanks to the energetic sounds and eye-catching showmanship of the band Jessie's Girls. The show was produced by Converse music business students as the project for their spring term course.

"Your success as a college president will be measured by the good that is done when each student takes full advantage of the gift that is a college education and a Converse College degree. There can be no higher calling, and I know of no one more ready to do it."

Dr. Philip L. Dubois
Chancellor, University of North Carolina at Charlotte

“What better way to celebrate the Converse College legacy of developing women who lead and effect positive change in their professions, their communities and their families than to install this first-rank achiever who embraces her status as a role model by rolling up her sleeves every day to labor in the trenches?”

Jean Toal, Chief Justice (Ret.),
Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina

"We, your alumnae, look boldly to the future and the work we will do side-by-side... We pledge to help you grow the rich legacy of Converse, for we know we all share in this great responsibility and honor."

Caroline Watts Morris '64
President, Converse College Alumnae Association

“As president, you are entrusted with the safekeeping of my sisters – past, present, and future. . . You join a sisterhood that spans the globe and transcends generations. . . We will support you and the Converse students of tomorrow with our time, with our resources, with our voices and actions, and through the connections we make in the world beyond Converse. And we will come home again, and again, to this place of joy.”

An ear for poetry

BY JOHN JETER

Aristotle used roughly 14,000 words for his Poetics. This article runs 500 words about poetics, specifically the works of ELLEN BRYANT VOIGT '64, whose trenchant poems earned her a prestigious MacArthur Fellowship. Mrs. Voigt could distill this entire story into a tweet.

The same way a jeweler chooses only the finest diamonds for each ring, Mrs. Voigt selects and arranges every word with “liquid precision,” as Publishers Weekly says; the bible of the book business echoes critics who, like the august Kenyon Review literary magazine, hail the 74-year-old Virginia native as the “quintessential American elegist.”

In turn, Mrs. Voigt offers “my sincere acknowledgment to Converse for its importance in my life and professional success.” Indeed, were it not for a scholarship that sent her toward music education, she might not have discovered poetry. It was at Converse where a friend introduced her to lyrical icons Rainer Maria Rilke and E.E. Cummings.

Her most recent success: the MacArthur “genius grant,” which she won in 2015 along with 23 other creative luminaries, who received $625,000 each, no strings attached. Honorees are lauded for “pushing the boundaries of their fields and improving our world in imaginative, unexpected ways.”

As Mrs. Voigt said to a public radio station in Vermont, where she and her husband, Fran, live, music influences her writing entirely (her word). “I primarily write by my ear, I write by sound first.” Poetry, she said, “does its work through music.”

Likewise, her verses reflect “her restless search for the means to unite two artistic impulses: to sing and to tell stories,” The Atlantic wrote.

“The most important things Converse provided me were a liberal arts education and a context small enough for me to pursue it in an extremely roundabout way,” she says. “Like many, if not most, 16-year-olds, I didn’t know myself or the world sufficiently to make wise choices; in my case, this was additionally complicated by a life thus far defined and absorbed in music, a willful temperament, and economic circumstances.”

As for said temperament, she describes herself nowadays as cantankerous (her word). In her eighth

“I primarily write by ear,
I write by sound first.
Poetry does its work
through music.”

and latest volume, Headwaters, the poem, “Geese,” explains:

there is no cure for temperament it's how we recognize ourselves

That’s just one example illustrating not only her economy of words, but her evolution toward eschewing punctuation, even capitalization—“as though she has burst in on each poem mid-thought,” as Publishers Weekly describes her constructions.

But it’s clear, in her writing and in corresponding with her, that she’s rarely mid-anything, especially relentless learning.

“In pretty much all of my work, and especially in Headwaters, I’ve been intent on trying to learn whatever it’s possible to learn about the inherent nature of humans, animals, individuals, and ‘collectives,’ whether families and neighborhoods, tribes, and colonies.”

In other words, her pen sings in words, verses, and even spaces, composing a conservatory of works, each poem a note rising from the music of her alma mater.

John Jeter, contributing writer, is an adjunct professor in Converse’s new Music Business & Technology Certificate program and received the 2017 Above and Beyond Award for service to students. He is also a journalist and novelist. Commenting on his interview with Voigt for this article, he shared, “A writer asking another writer to write about her is akin to a serious cellist asking to join Yo-Yo Ma on stage. I’m a journalist and Ms. Voigt is a poet and writer, which, to me, is kind of like the difference between a washboard player and a classical pianist. But she was as generous with me as I imagine Yo-Yo Ma is with a similarly starstruck aspirant.”

“The friendship, the camaraderie, and the love that you feel from the faculty and everybody there—it’s been a stepping stone for all of us.”

REIGN OF REHNS

During her last four years at Converse, legacy student CARSON REHN '17 bathed elephants, groomed horses and handled sharks and stingrays.

A legacy student is the daughter or granddaughter of a Converse alumna. Carson is what you might call a double-legacy. Her mother, Evelyn Matthews Rehn, graduated in 1992, and her grandmother, Fran Flournoy Matthews, attended Converse for two years as a member of the Class of 1965. Carson is also a double major, so for many reasons she expected graduation to be double-special.

The tradition is for a Converse legacy student to be hooded by her family member who is an alumna. “They said only one person could help with the hooding, but I have two degrees and two family members, so I asked if it were possible for them both to do it,” Carson says.

She received an enthusiastic yes, that each would drape her with regalia – one marking her Bachelor of Science in Biology and the other her Bachelor of Arts in German Studies.

“It was really awesome that both could participate,” Carson says, “That made it much more special.”

Legacy students belong to a special breed. In fact, for the last four years Carson has been the recipient of a scholarship which recognizes descendants of an alumna or a student whose sister, aunt, or stepmother attended Converse. The scholarship was established in 2002 by the Kinney Family Scholarship Endowment in memory of the family’s great-grandmother Florence Alexandria McLeod Kinney, Class of 1896; great-aunt Annie Florence Kinney ’28; and in honor of Elizabeth Kinney McNiel ’89.

As a newly-minted graduate, this daughter of a military family that moved all over the world is off again, this time to Edinburgh, Scotland, where she will attend veterinary school at the Royal (Dick) School of Veterinary Studies.

“This is the perfect story of voice, value, and vision,” says Marianna MacIntyre ’81, who took Carson under her wing the moment Carson arrived on campus from Stuttgart, Germany, where her father, a U.S. Army colonel, had been stationed. “Her grandmother had the vision and used her voice to have her daughter come here, and her daughter did the same, because they recognized the lifelong value of a Converse education.”

Evelyn Rehn remembers her mother singing the Alma

Carson’s stepping stones at Converse have included working at an elephant preserve in Chiang Mai, Thailand; an externship at an equine hospital in Tryon, N.C.; and studied at a marine academy in Clearwater, Fla. She was also captain of the Valkyries equestrian team.

Making Converse the place to grow and explore her passions was a choice Carson made all on her own.

“Even though my mother and grandmother attended Converse, it was my own decision,” she says. “I decided to come to Converse because I wanted to, but now it’s something we all share. It’s really nice to have that kind of connection, like a keep-it-in-the-family kind of thing. And it’s cool to think that, one day, my daughter could go to Converse.”

Mater—Watching her children down through the years— whenever the family drove by Spartanburg. Of the legacy she shares with Carson, Evelyn says:

“Being in a learning environment that’s just female makes strong females. It gives us the confidence to go on and be successful adults. The friendship, the camaraderie, and the love that you feel from the faculty and everybody there—it’s been a stepping stone for all of us.”

“What Reach Out and Read wants to accomplish with Converse is to educate and activate young up-and-coming advocates and leaders for early childhood.”

READING UP ON LEADERSHIP

It’s captivating to read a baby’s face, and it’s even more captivating to help a baby come face-to-face with reading. That’s what four Converse students experienced during a deeply immersive 10-week internship piloted by Converse and the Carolinas chapter of the national organization, Reach Out and Read. It is the first Reach Out and Read internship of its kind in the country.

“The experience broadened my outlook, introducing new perspectives and transferable skills for my field,” says Illinois junior Elaina Smith, a deaf education major who was selected for the program.

The idea was conceived during a literacy summit Converse hosted for Reach Out and Read in 2016. The summit brought together Dr. Terrell Tracy, who oversees Converse’s Educational Specialist in Literary degree program, with Callee Boulware, executive director of Reach Out and Read Carolinas. “We were just brainstorming together,” Boulware says. “We felt like there’s a strong culture around leadership development at Converse.”

Development is the entire concept behind the nonprofit that started in 1989 in Boston. Reach Out and Read primarily serves low-income families and children from birth to age 5.

“Families go to the doctor for many years before entering the school system,” says Dr. Julie Jones, Director of Teacher Education and Student Teaching at Converse. “If we can model those best reading practices, starting in the pediatrician’s office, then parents are going to do it at home.”

Says Boulware, “What Reach Out and Read wants to accomplish with Converse is to educate and activate young up-and-coming advocates and leaders for early childhood.

This is important if you’re going to be a teacher and it also positively impacts everything in your community.”

Thanks to an alumna’s $10,000 grant, the four interns earn a stipend, plus mileage. They’re deployed to four Spartanburg-area clinics where they are fully engaged with Reach Out and Read, the community, and the pediatrics practices.

“When we talk to providers about what we can help them with,” Elaina says, “it’s interesting that they’re so willing to take in information from juniors in college. They went to medical school, and they’ve been in practice. It’s quite surreal that I should give knowledge to my provider, who says, ‘Yeah, let’s do that.’ I’m, like, ‘Okay, wow.’”

“That is so cool,” says Dr. Tracy, who notes that each student had to report to a Converse audience at semester’s end. “I’m excited for these four women.”

So are they.

Says Chiara Mattamira, a junior from Milan, Italy, who is double majoring in mathematics and chemistry: “Out of all I have gained from this internship, I believe the most valuable was learning about the true meaning of networking, collaboration, and collective impact. I have no doubt that no matter what career path I will choose, those life lessons will be helpful and profitable.”

CREATIVITY THAT WORKS: TURNING PASSION INTO A PROFESSION

BY BOONE HOPKINS

On a chilly evening last December, students from the School of the Arts (SOA) were heating up the live music scene in Spartanburg. With an eclectic set list including violin sonatas, Beatles covers, and quirky choreography set to Rodgers & Hammerstein lyrics, the show was enthusiastically received by its Converse audience - along with many astonished regulars at the Hub City Tap House.

Exploring new opportunities for audience engagement and blazing new trails in the arts is the central focus of the SOA's new Creativity that Works initiative. Now in its second year, this approach parlays arts talent into lucrative arts careers and is already producing excellent results.

Developed by SOA faculty to compliment the in-depth study in each arts discipline that has long been the hallmark of a Converse degree, Creativity that Works incorporates exciting new classes, degree programs, and opportunities for students in art, theatre and music to shine. With an emphasis on the soft skills that ultimately help an aspiring actress, musician, or artist get a gig, the SOA faculty work on professionalization from the moment a student arrives on campus.

Anastacia Hutchinson, who is developing an individualized major in Theatre, English and Special Education, discovered new prospects for her future through the Arts Foundations courses that define the SOA's first year of study.

"Interdisciplinary Foundations gave me the chance to collaborate with other arts majors, refine my personal brand, and map out my goals in social advocacy and arts leadership," she said. "I was placed in an awesome 'pod' with studio art and music majors in which we collaborated on real-life projects that provided diverse, creative perspectives. We learned how other artists think, and this made me think differently about my own work. Seeing things differently is what makes a great performer and I am definitely developing that skill." In the second phase of the foundations coursework, Hutchinson and her peers learn from alumnae and other artists with successful careers in music, art, theatre and dance.

Creativity that Works also has a strong experiential learning component to help students shape their aesthetic as creators, including international study travel, faculty-mentored research and internships in the field that they aim to enter.

Dr. Susanne Gunter, Chair of the Department of Art & Design, observes, "Working with potential employers provides valuable experience and builds resumes toward acquiring future work. Every student has opportunities for internships, clinical or teaching experiences, depending upon the degree program. We are forging community partnerships with businesses, agencies and institutions across the Upstate and beyond."

Last summer, Caitlin Conneely '18 interned at the Tryon Fine Arts Center, where she worked closely with marketing manager and Converse alumna Michelle Fleming '13. "I challenged myself to explore outside of my traditional area, so I worked in the organization's administration rather than the technical/theatrical area," she said. Her experiences ranged from researching information, writing press releases and updating social media, to supporting the planning and execution for fundraising events and community outreach programs like a juried art competition. "I now have a better understanding of how arts organizations run, what they need in order to be effective, and how they can work with their community and use volunteers to enhance their events and program development. This internship helped me get my foot in the door and understand how to use my skills in the arts to help build a better community."

"Seeing things differently is what makes a great performer and I am definitely developing that skill."

As for our live monthly music series at the Hub City Tap House, this seemingly odd approach of taking music students to a pub has proven to be an incredibly rich learning lab. "Arts on Tap," coordinated by Dr.

Chris Vaneman, Head of the Petrie School of Music, is an avenue for reaching out to find new audiences. "Every day it gets easier for people to sequester themselves in front of their computer screens and mainline their own personal Netflix queue," Vaneman says. "Live performing arts get people together and create community; they build shared experiences and life-giving connections among people. We artists have to be willing and able to go where the people are and give them those experiences. By mixing up music styles and genres, we give audiences the chance to get to know stuff that's outside of their own personal zones of familiarity, and that's really exciting."

As amplifiers, microphones, and lighting instruments are taken down at the Hub City Tap House and students celebrate a great set, the SOA faculty enjoy knowing these students are prepared to deal with far more than just stage fright. Converse students are ready to turn their passion into their profession.

EDUCATORS EMPOWERING EDUCATORS

BY DR. JULIE JONES AND JED DEARYBURY

K-12 classrooms are a changing entity. Pen pals now come in the form of face-to-face video conferences. Shared Google docs are commonplace, extending learning beyond the traditional classroom schedule. Field trips occur in virtual reality, allowing students to visit places they could never have experienced before. Today’s learning is an engaging experience, rather than a passive one.

As the education profession rapidly evolves, a Converse degree continues to be recognized as a mark of innovation by school leaders across the nation. Converse is equipping future educators to not only meet the demands of teaching in the 21st century, but also to lead the way among their peers. Our faculty provide insight on the current trends in education – from digital technology to arts integration to the globally connected classroom – and center their teaching around five key areas: creativity, collaboration, critical thinking, communication and community.

CREATIVITY

How can tin foil, straws, sticky notes, colored tape, Play-doh, costumes and more make children’s learning engaging? Come visit Carmichael Hall to see arts-infused instruction in action. Integrating the arts into the general curriculum is a core component of Converse teacher preparation. Our model classroom is complete with its very own piano and students can be seen learning about current educational trends by sculpting, singing and dancing.

“Arts make the learning stick,” says Jed Dearybury. “Years ago I wrote a jingle to help students learn the seven continents. Ten years later, students are still singing it to remember where in the world they are!”

In today’s classroom, students have instant access to all kinds of facts via online searches. It’s important that they learn what to do with that knowledge. Where are ideas born? Creativity is the path to innovation for all learners.

COLLABORATION

Converse education students are connecting with other students across the globe – in Iowa, Texas, Kansas, Pennsylvania, Ireland, Kenya, India and Australia – for a variety of collaborative projects. They can often be found Skyping with authors rather than reading their texts in isolation. Tours of national parks, museums, and animal conservatories spark ideas for virtual field trips they can take into local public schools.

Embracing the online community enables Converse preservice teachers to learn from professional education circles well beyond our campus.

“When my Converse students collaborated with 4th grade bloggers in the Chicago area, the power of academic feedback became real. All the theory they read about was made authentic with this connection,” says Dr. Julie Jones.

CRITICAL THINKING

Teaching in the 21st century extends far beyond the basic subjects. Teachers must provide students with unique experiences to cultivate their critical-thinking abilities. Converse professors model a variety of innovative instruction strategies.

Breakout EDU allows students to work collaboratively, solving a series of critical thinking puzzles to open a locked box. Makerspace is an opportunity to utilize engineering skills in a collaborative work space – learning, exploring, making and sharing – using high tech and no tech tools. Genius hour is another method of fostering critical thinking by bringing individual passions to student-led projects.

Through innovative strategies such as these, Converse students are challenged to develop their own cognitive skills and gain a strong pedagogical understanding of what 21st century teaching should be.

COMMUNICATION

The education profession is witnessing the rise of teacher-leaders thanks to a growing collaborative movement on social media. Twitter, Google Plus, and Skype are a few of the platforms on which modern educators are reaching out for professional development, independently seeking inspiration and solutions with peer professionals through the building of a personal learning network (PLN).

Converse students and alumni collaborate online using the hashtag #conversechat. This platform allows them to connect with one another around the clock, sharing innovation in their classrooms. These connections strengthen the power of mentorship and networking across the Converse sisterhood.

COMMUNITY

Ongoing professional development is vital to the success of educators. Converse provides both current students and teachers across the region with engaging, relevant experiences to strengthen their classrooms. In partnership with the Palmetto State Teachers Association, Converse hosts an Edcamp – a “nonconference” experience for educators by educators. This hands-on, innovative training is open to teachers across the Upstate of South Carolina as well as to Converse students. EdCamp is a community effort, supported by local businesses and national partners such as mindSpark Learning, Lily Sarah Grace, and Discovery Place EDU.

The Converse Master Series is another new avenue of opportunity, featuring alumni who are dynamic movers and shakers in the field. These alumni come to campus to share teaching wisdom, knowledge and best practice with current students. The connections that are forged provide many of our pre-service teachers with mentors as they enter the classroom. The Masters Series will open to all Converse alumni as professional development workshop experiences beginning in Fall 2017.

TWO ALUMNAE NAMED SC TEACHERS OF THE YEAR

Whether you are an aspiring teacher or a classroom veteran, when you enroll in our education programs at Converse, you join a legacy of award-winning teachers and school administrators.

Erin Fox '14, an English teacher and cross country coach at Gaffney High School, was named 2018 SC Teacher of the Year. Pam Flynn '97 was also named as a finalist for the award. Fox (pictured above with SC Superintendent of Education Molly Spearman) earned her MEd in Gifted Education, and Flynn earned her EdS in Administration & Supervision from Converse.

April Willard Purser '03 was named SC Public Charter School Teacher of the Year. Purser teaches at High Point Academy in Spartanburg and graduated from Converse with a degree in elementary education.

A Modern-Day Vision for Mickel Library

Funded by an anonymous donor, Converse College's Mickel Library is undergoing an extensive, multi-phase makeover. The project has been underway since late 2016 and will transform the first and second floors over the next year.

"In recent years, academic libraries have been providing learning areas where students can work collaboratively on group assignments or projects, while continuing to support traditional study and research," said Wade Woodward, Director of the Mickel Library. "Such facilities typically include a variety of computer workstations, portable whiteboards, conference rooms, and seating configurations. This is what we set out to accomplish at Converse."

The main floor lobby area is the first section to get a face-lift. A recent grant proposal hopes to renovate five additional areas, including adding a multimedia computer room to the second floor, complete with Mac computers suitable for video editing.

New student collaboration areas and contemporary study spaces are now complete on the first floor, incorporating innovative designs and current technology to meet the evolving academic needs of students and faculty.

AN EVOLUTION SINCE 1889

Originally housed in two rooms in Wilson Hall, the library had a few 'homes' before it finally settled into a permanent residence on the southwest corner of campus. In 1904, a $10,000 grant from Andrew Carnegie allowed for the construction of a separate building that held 25,000 volumes, four study rooms, and a general reading room. Today, Carnegie Hall houses the offices of Human Resources, Business and Finance, and Student Billing. In the 1940's, funds were raised to build Gwathmey Library. The 20,000 square-foot facility was one of the first libraries built at a women's college following World War II. During the 1980's, an addition was built onto Gwathmey, doubling the size and shelving capacity of the building and adding numerous study carrels, music listening rooms and a student lounge. The library was renamed for Buck and Minor Mickel, the primary donors of this massive renovation.

Today, Mickel Library's mission is to provide high-quality information resources and to support the development of study and research skills in our rapidly-evolving information environment. Electronic holdings include access to more than 40,000 full text journals and upwards of 252,000 eBooks.

REIMAGINING THE LIBRARY OF TODAY

In early 2016, a student focus group was convened to help establish a modern-day vision for Mickel Library. Students expressed their desire for a more welcoming, technologically-supportive library environment with small group study spaces that would allow for interaction without disturbing other library patrons.

Dr. Emily Harbin '99, Director of the Writing Center and Assistant Professor of English, contributed extensive research on trends in library design. "Modern libraries serve as a dynamic space where students access information, use technology to create new products with that information, and work collaboratively," she said. "We started with the lobby so that it would send the message immediately to students and visitors that Mickel Library is changing for the better."

Just inside the front entrance, where massive shelves of reference books and heavy wooden tables once lived, students are greeted by a welcoming, bright workspace housing comfortable chairs with flip-up desks, rolling dry-erase boards and group-friendly work rooms. Wider computer tables give them ample room to spread out materials and work alongside one another.

Students have responded enthusiastically, and library staff have seen a dramatic increase in their use of the new collaboration area.

Mickel Library is seeking funds to continue updating the main and second floors with flexible study spaces and technology upgrades. Lauren Ward, Converse's Bequest and Research Manager, said everyone can make a difference, no matter the size of their gift. "A group of classmates could give jointly to support an aspect of the project and make a significant impact on the lives of the students here at Converse."

CONVERSE ROCKED THE TOWER! On November 10, 2016, Converse alumnae, faculty, staff and students rallied together for a one-day fundraising blitz, with 421 gifts pouring in for a total of $80,714. For 24 hours, Converse friends and families lit up social media by expressing their devotion and challenging one another to join in. Homages came in from around the world, from right here on campus, to India, to Morocco. It was 1889 Week, and while students on campus wore their ears, horns and tails, alumnae across the globe supported their sisters by putting on purple and gold, making their gift, and snapping a selfie with their "Count Me In!" envelope.

Here are a few of our favorite alumnae posts. Follow the hashtag #RockTheTower for more!

Perhaps only at a small liberal arts college can you point to deep, life-long relationships with faculty and administrators. Sitting in their classrooms or around their kitchen tables, I learned who I was through the power of these relationships.

Because I couldn't have gone to Converse without scholarships. Because – now more than ever – we need strong, educated women. Because my life would be so much poorer without the friends I made there 20-odd years ago.
Katie Proctor '97

Converse is where I found my voice and began to advocate for the communities I continue to serve today. I am proud to be a part of a strong family of women, who came before and continue to come after me. She supported me, so I support her. Count me in!

MEET YOUR NEW ALUMNAE DIRECTOR

Inspired by her unwavering passion for the advancement of women and dedication to the Converse community, Converse named Jessica G. Eggimann '00 as Director of Alumnae Relations and Advisory Boards in April. Eggimann began her new role the week of President Newkirk's inauguration, and the exciting pace has continued ever since!

After more than 13 years in key policy and administrative roles on Capitol Hill and in the private sector, Eggimann comes home to her alma mater from Washington D.C., where she served as Chief Clerk and Legislative Coordinator for the Committee on Veterans' Affairs in the U.S. House of Representatives.

"We are delighted that Jessica has returned to Converse and has joined our team as the Director of Alumnae Relations and Advisory Boards," said President Krista Newkirk. "Her impressive experience and her knowledge of Converse and our alumnae will make her an effective advocate as she works to keep our alumnae connected and engaged."

Eggimann will oversee the development of Converse Alumnae Chapters and serve as the College's liaison to the Alumnae Association Board and Board of Visitors. She will also be instrumental in planning Converse's exciting new stay-on-campus, summertime Reunion Weekend.

After completing her Bachelor's degree in Psychology and Spanish, Eggimann devoted four years to the Converse Admissions team, rising to the level of Assistant Director before heeding a call to journey up the Eastern seaboard to pursue a career in the nation's capitol. In 2014, she joined the Converse College Board of Visitors, serving on the Career Development Committee.

Grateful for the opportunity to return to Converse, her "home" in the South, Eggimann looks forward to nurturing the Converse alumni network and reconnecting with Valkyries nationwide.

"I am incredibly excited about immersing myself in the alumnae community and reconnecting with the Converse sisterhood. Preparing for this new role and being back on campus has reminded me of my own Converse experiences - the friendships I made, the leadership roles I assumed, the relationships that were developed with professors - they all shaped me into the woman I am today," said Eggimann.

Dear Converse Sisters,

The inauguration of a new president. A new “summer camp,” stay-on-campus Reunion format. A new alumnae director. A new 120-student-bed residence hall that opens its doors this fall. A new vision and new faces in Institutional Advancement.

As you have read on every page of this gorgeous publication, 2017 is off to a monumental year. New leadership, inspiration and spirit - Converse College is alive with NEW energy!

The College has big goals as we prepare for the 2017-2018 academic year: increase enrollment to over 365 undergraduate students; enroll 20 Converse International School students; and double the Converse Annual Fund goal to $3 Million, just to name a few.

YOUR Converse College Alumnae Association remains dedicated to making higher education accessible for all young women with our CARRE (Converse Alumnae Recruitment and Retention Effort) Committee. We are also committed to maintaining the strength of the sisterhood with post-graduate professional development and networking with the TAPP (Touching Alumnae Peer-to-Peer) Committee.

Our alumnae partnerships and gifts are vital to opening the doors of Converse to deserving young women. During 2016-2017, 624 students received over $3.3 million in Converse scholarships. When you give, you join the “power of many;” and your impact is truly transformative. Gifts of every level make a difference.

Converse empowered YOU to lead and the most powerful leadership tool you have is your own personal example. Inspire new generations...share your talents and gifts with your Alma Mater.

Much love to all of you and thank you for all that you do for Converse.
